Swat training scenarios

By Police1 Staff Training is the lifeblood of any law enforcement agency, but especially for SWAT teams who are challenged to respond to complex and dangerous incidents. We hope you will make the following tactical training tips from Police1 columnists and contributors part of your training calendar in 2021. Review debriefs of events to understand how would you handle them. (Police1) 1. Don't keep it simple! Being on a SWAT team is challenging and we need to be professional and we should strive to be as knowledgeable as we can. 2. You don't always have to sweat at SWAT training, there needs to be an academic component. Discuss barricades, hostage rescue, high-risk warrants and everything else SWAT teams respond to. 3. Review debriefs of events, after all, they have happened and they could happen in your jurisdiction. Understand how would you handle them. Conduct tabletop exercises to see what your team actually knows and address deficiencies. 4. If you have a National Tactical Officers Association (NTOA) membership, read articles that are relevant to your needs and use the shared file area so you don't spend all your time recreating something that exists. 5. Obtain an audible book account and have your team members listen to books that pertain to leadership and team development. — Lt. Matt Hardesty is a 26-year veteran of law enforcement who served 22 years on the SWAT team as an operator, grenadier, rappel master and team leader and executive officer. 6. Concentrate as much as possible in your exercises on basic skills performed smoothly as a team especially: — Lt. Dan Marcou is an internationally-recognized police trainer who was a highly-decorated police officer with 33 years of full-time law enforcement experience. He is a co-author of "Street Survival II." 7. Make use of abbreviated tabletop exercises to get command staff involved in tactical training. Leadership and critical incident management skills are essential to the successful resolution of a tactical event, and can be exercised in brief simulations that force police leaders to practice them in realistic scenarios. — Lieutenant Colonel (ret.) Mike Wood is the son of a 30-year California Highway Patrolman and the author of "Newhall Shooting: A Tactical Analysis," the highly-acclaimed study of the 1970 California Highway Patrol gunfight in Newhall, California. 8. Go back to the basics. Use on-going scenario-based integrated training to teach, explain and reinforce the skills and most importantly the WHY related to the primary mission of SWAT: saving lives. — David Pearson and Dan Murphy are lieutenants with Fort Collins Police Services in Fort Collins, Colorado, and instructors for the National Tactical Officers Association. Next: What are the biggest challenges for SWAT teams in 2021? You are walking home from the grocery store and carrying several bags of food. Two men are walking behind you and yell out to you: "Hey Johnny!" You turn and tell them your name isn't "Johnny" and that they have mistaken you for someone else. They apologize and you continue walking home. [...] position of disadvantage, robbery, stabbing, training No Comments View Post Written by Greg Ellifritz You are walking along the street when a man on a bicycle rides along side of you. The man suddenly hops off the bike. He has a gun in one hand and a knife in the other. Before you can act, he has closed the distance to within arm's [...] Close quarter shooting, robbery No Comments View Post Written by Greg Ellifritz Retail pharmacies are dangerous places. While commercial robberies have decreased (likely due to Covid) in the most recent studies, we saw almost 900 pharmacy robberies each year in the United States. As the effects of Covid decline, experts predict that these robberies will increase again. Pharmacies are [...] drugs, robbery View Post Written by: Greg Ellifritz One of the goals of any type of combative training is to "remove novelty." Novel situations combined with stress often force our brains to operate in a more instinctive manner. When operating this way, higher order thinking isn't possible. Our goal as trainers is to introduce our students to as [...] kidnapping View Post Written by: Greg Ellifritz Halloween is right around the corner. 'Tis the season for scary houses and "haunted forests." Have you ever thought about what you would do in one of these "haunted" houses or forests if real life gunplay starts to occur? Consider the following scenario: You are waiting in line to enter [...] ccw, flashlight tactics, tactical training scenario View Post Written by: Greg Ellifritz A few weeks ago I saw this particular news article and thought that the event it described would be worthy of discussion. Before you do, you may want to think about a few things. Take a look at this article. A cop used his pistol to break a car window and accidentally cranked off a round. Don't think that [...] extreme close range, impact weapons, Mike Seeklander View Post Written by: Greg Ellifritz I was on my favorite bike path last week when I noticed that there was an incredible increase in the number of cyclists as compared to the times before Covid-19. Even though the trail is very wide, at times there were traffic jams as bicyclists filled every foot of the [...] ambush, bicycle, crowd violence, fitness, holsters, robbery, tactical training scenario, The Wilderness View Post Written by: Greg Ellifritz Read the story below. You don't know either the [...] knife fighting, tactical training scenario View Post Written by: Greg Ellifritz I don't know the back story for this video other than what the man filming the incident wrote. That may or may not be correct, but here is his description of what happened: "Yesterday I jumped out of my car to kick a lead pipe away from two [...] impact weapons, road rage View Post Written by: Greg Ellifritz Read the first article on this page. Imagine a similar scenario. You hear noises in your house at night. Upon investigation, you find a man you don't know sleeping on your couch. What do you do? The homeowner in this story shot the intruder. No doubt many of [...] home defense, tactical training scenario View Post I live in Columbus, Ohio. In the past couple weeks we've seen several shootings at local shopping malls (two at Polaris, one at Easton). We've also seen a couple shootings outside of bars in seedier parts of the city. It's spring. We see this stuff every year as the temperatures warm. This year is [...] active shooter View Post Written by: Greg Ellifritz Watch the video of this takeover-style robbery of a bank in Brazil. It's odd enough that it merits some discussion because the same type of events can also occur here. Take a look at the surveillance video below before I detail some discussion points. The video, along with a [...] ccw, negligent discharge, robbery View Post Written by Greg Ellifritz I once responded to a very unique call in my cop job. The details might generate some critical thinking on the part of my readers.
